MONDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 21.

The Tongue of the Maid of Athens.
Maid of Athens, we must part!
Your will is strong, your temper's tart,
And, when I go and when I come,
Your tongue swings like a pendulum.
Bear my prayer I go,
Remember 'tis my last request,
And if you can for an hour or so,
Keep it still and let me rest.

By those long locks all uncircized,
Bow all about by every wise;
But that cursed nose all out of joint,
Like an incorrigible point.
Check that tongue's strong flow.
Oh, heed, I bid, this one boisterous,
And, if you can for an hour or so,
Keep it still and let me rest.

By those lips that never close;
By those eyes that do not shut their lids,
By his head, so prompt to tell
What words can never speak so well,
Your tongue is daring to bid me;
In a fourth words like one possest;
But if you can for an hour or so,
Please keep it still and let me rest.

Maid of Athens, I am gone!
I'll be at peace when I'm gone,
Yet, though I fly to Istanbul,
Your student song shall trill my soul
Can I cease to hear thee? No!

That tongue is heard from east to west;

But, if you can for an hour or so,

Oh, keep it still and let me rest.
